

A. Issues found

The website-ready draft is broadly aligned with the approved document architecture, but it is not yet optimal for publication. The main issues are: it exposes too much internal architecture in public FAQ copy, it creates consent ambiguity by combining a master acceptance checkbox with document-specific checkboxes, and it includes an optional public-facing checkbox about internal procedures that should not sit in the user acceptance layer. It also needs a cleaner separation between public website copy, applicant onboarding copy, logged-in dashboard copy, and internal-only use.

Some wording is accurate but too abstract for a premium website layer. Phrases such as “clear document framework” and “transparent program structure” are acceptable, but the stronger public message is that the program is supported by five core affiliate-facing documents. The line about “internal review procedures” should be kept to dashboard/support contexts only, not general website surfaces.

B. Missing or unclear points

The public layer should focus only on the five affiliate-facing documents: Affiliate Terms & Conditions, Affiliate Code of Conduct, Approved Marketing Materials Policy, Qualified Referral & Payout Policy, and Affiliate Privacy Notice. Internal complaint and tax procedures should not be foregrounded publicly and should only be referenced indirectly where needed. The copy should also state more clearly that the website gives a summary, while the full document review happens in the application, onboarding flow, and dashboard.

The consent model should be tightened. The safest website/product approach is to keep document-specific acceptance checkboxes as the primary operative layer, and optionally one short confirmation that the applicant reviewed the required documents. The earlier optional checkbox about internal procedures should be removed from the public-facing acceptance layer.

FAQ

What documents govern the POOOL Affiliate Program?

The core affiliate-facing documents are the Affiliate Terms & Conditions, Affiliate Code of Conduct, Approved Marketing Materials Policy, Qualified Referral & Payout Policy, and Affiliate Privacy Notice.

Why does POOOL use several documents instead of one?

Each document has a specific role. Together, they explain how the program works, what affiliates may do, how referrals qualify, how payouts are handled, and how affiliate data is processed.

Which documents do affiliates need to review before activation?

Before activation, affiliates must review the required affiliate documents in the onboarding flow.

Are all affiliate program documents public?

No. Core affiliate-facing documents are made available to applicants and affiliates. Some internal operating procedures are used only by POOOL teams to run and protect the program.

Where can I find the affiliate documents?

Core affiliate documents are available through the affiliate application, onboarding flow, and affiliate dashboard. Selected summaries may also appear on the affiliate program page or help center.

Why are some program controls handled internally?

Some controls, such as complaint handling, investigations, and payout operations, are managed through internal procedures so the program can be operated consistently and responsibly.

Errors:

- You must accept all required affiliate documents before continuing.
- Please review the required document before continuing.
- Your affiliate onboarding is incomplete. Please complete all required document steps.

Warnings:

- A required document has been updated. Please review the latest version to continue.
- Payouts remain subject to the Qualified Referral & Payout Policy and related operational review.
- Your affiliate account cannot be activated until all required document acknowledgements are complete.

Keep “Affiliate participation is subject to internal review procedures” only for dashboard/support contexts, not general website use.

Short website version

The POOOL Affiliate Program is supported by a clear set of core documents covering participation, conduct, approved materials, payouts, and privacy. Core affiliate documents are available through the application, onboarding flow, and affiliate dashboard, while certain internal procedures are used by POOOL teams to operate and protect the program.

D. Final legal-review flags only

1. Whether the Approved Marketing Materials Policy should be fully visible before approval or only in onboarding/dashboard.
2. Whether the Qualified Referral & Payout Policy should be fully public or public-summary only.

3. Whether website copy should mention internal complaint and tax procedures explicitly, or only refer generally to internal operational controls.
4. Final wording for the acceptance structure if product wants both a summary acknowledgment and document-specific acceptance.

E. Readiness note for website, onboarding, and product implementation

This revised website layer is ready for internal review and product implementation planning, and it is close to publication-ready. The main remaining decision is not wording quality but visibility design: how public the materials policy and payout policy should be, and how explicitly the public layer should refer to internal operational controls. Once those are confirmed, this can be used as the production website/onboarding copy for the document-architecture layer.
