

A. Issues found

The draft is materially aligned with the approved baseline and the approved Disclosure Library: it preserves the separation between disclosures for all investors and additional disclosures for referral-path users, keeps the main placement logic across referral landing page, registration, and pre-investment, and carries over affiliate-onboarding and support-use disclosure concepts.

The main issues are about surface discipline and concision, not legal meaning.

First, the file still behaves like a working pack, not a final website layer. It contains multiple homepage options, a full content map, affiliate onboarding, investor confirmations, support content, and implementation notes in one block. That is useful internally, but for production it should be tightened by surface.

Second, some wording is slightly too internal or abstract for a premium public layer. Phrases like “structured disclosure system” and “clear disclosure layers” are accurate, but sound more internal than customer-facing. The public layer should sound simpler and more trust-building.

Third, a few texts should be made more consistent with the approved library wording. The strongest example is the referrer-role wording: the approved library repeatedly uses personal investment adviser / broker / personal representative, while some website copy shortens that to personal adviser or broker. The shorter version is usable in compact UI, but the main explanatory copy should track the approved phrasing more closely.

Fourth, the onboarding and warning layer should be slightly cleaner. “Your account or payout status may be under review” is better kept for affiliate dashboard or support contexts, not the generic affiliate onboarding flow. The affiliate monitoring disclosure itself is valid, but the context of use should be narrower.

B. Missing or unclear points

The final public layer should distinguish more clearly between:

- public website copy,
- investor flow disclosures,
- affiliate onboarding disclosures,
- and dashboard/support notices.

Right now the content includes all of them, but not yet in the cleanest publishable separation.

The public explanatory copy should also say a bit more clearly that official POOOL materials, disclosures, fees, and risk information are controlling. That fuller formulation appears in the approved Disclosure Library and should remain visible at least in the FAQ and pre-investment layer.

Referral-specific disclosure should remain targeted to referral-path users only, which the draft generally does correctly and should continue to preserve.

C. Revised Website Copy Final

Homepage short copy

Clear disclosures. Independent decisions. Official information first.

POOOL uses a controlled referral model. Official POOOL materials, disclosures, fees, and risk information remain the controlling source of information. Where a user enters through a referral path, additional referral disclosures may apply.

FAQ

Why do I see referral disclosures on POOOL?

If you entered POOOL through a referral path, additional disclosures may appear to explain that a referrer may receive compensation and that official POOOL information remains the controlling source of information.

Does the referrer advise me?

No. A referrer may introduce POOOL and direct you to official information, but the referrer is not your personal investment adviser, broker, or personal representative.

What should I rely on when reviewing an opportunity?

Please rely on official POOOL materials, disclosures, fees, and risk information. Official POOOL information is the controlling source of information.

Do I need to make my own decision?

Yes. Your investment decision must be made independently and based on official POOOL information.

Can a referrer be paid?

Yes. Where applicable, a referrer may receive compensation if your referral is validly attributed and qualifies under POOOL's rules.

Why are there different disclosures at different steps?

POOOL uses different disclosure points across referral entry, registration, and pre-investment so the right information appears at the right stage.

Short website version

POOOL uses a controlled referral model. Official POOOL information governs, investment decisions must be made independently, referral compensation may apply where a user enters through a referral path, and referrers are not personal investment advisers.

D. Final legal-review flags only

1. Final production wording for personal investment adviser / broker / personal representative in short-form customer UI.
2. Whether registration should remain disclosure-only or include an affirmative acknowledgement in some flows.
3. Whether the affiliate monitoring text should appear only in onboarding/dashboard, not on any public-facing page.

4. Whether some short disclosure blocks should always link to a fuller disclosure layer.

E. Readiness note for website, onboarding, and product implementation

This is ready for website, onboarding, and product implementation review. The substance is already strong and consistent with the approved Disclosure Library. The main improvement was tightening the public language, keeping referral-only disclosures properly targeted, and separating the cleaner publishable layer from the broader internal working pack.
