

A. Issues found

The draft is materially aligned with the approved tax-SOP logic: it keeps the core rule that affiliate payouts require complete payout and tax information, recipient classification, finance review, and final approval before release. It also correctly preserves the “no complete file, no payout” principle and the idea that payouts may be held where classification, withholding/review, or exception issues remain unresolved.

The main problem is surface mixing. The file is still a working pack rather than a final website/product layer. It combines homepage options, FAQ copy, onboarding text, checkbox text, tooltips, warnings, a full content map, internal field requirements, backend notes, and legal-review items in one output. That is useful internally, but too broad for a clean public-facing final.

A second issue is public overexposure of internal mechanics. Public-facing copy should not lean too heavily on internal language such as recipient-class operations, withholding/review checkpoints, exception-case workflow, and finance approval architecture. Those things are correct, but the public layer should explain them more simply and reserve the more operational detail for onboarding, dashboard help, and support.

A third issue is UX density. Four separate onboarding checkboxes plus six onboarding screens are directionally correct, but slightly heavy. The meaning should stay intact, while the surface should be tightened so the flow feels professional rather than procedural.

B. Missing or unclear points

The final website/product layer should distinguish more clearly between:

- public website copy,
- affiliate onboarding copy,
- affiliate dashboard/status copy,
- and support/help explanations.

Right now all four are present, but not yet separated cleanly enough for production.

The public layer should also say a little more clearly that a commission may appear in the dashboard before it is actually released. That distinction is already in the source draft and should remain visible, especially in dashboard and onboarding text.

The “no personal tax advice” wording is good, but it belongs mainly in onboarding, dashboard, and support contexts, not as a major homepage theme.

C. Revised Website Copy Final

Homepage support copy

Affiliate payouts are released only after payout details, tax details, required review steps, and final approval are complete.

Short website version

To receive affiliate payouts, you must complete your payout details and tax details and pass the required review before payout can be released. If required information is incomplete or still under review, payout may be placed on hold.

FAQ

Why do affiliate payouts require review?

POOOL uses a controlled payout process. Before release, payout details and tax details must be complete, required review steps must be completed, and payout must be approved for release.

What do I need to complete before I can receive payout?

You must complete your payout details, tax details, and any required review steps before payout can be released.

Why is my payout on hold?

A payout may be on hold because required information is incomplete, classification or review is still open, or additional review is required.

Can dashboard commission visibility trigger payout automatically?

No. A commission may appear in your dashboard before it is released. Release requires final review and approval.

Can POOOL release payout if the file is still unclear?

No. If required information is unclear or incomplete, the payout stays on hold until the file is resolved.

Does POOOL give affiliates personal tax advice?

No. POOOL does not provide personal tax advice through the affiliate onboarding flow or affiliate dashboard.

Onboarding flow

Screen 1 — Payout setup

To receive affiliate payouts, you must complete your payout and tax profile before payout can be released.

Screen 2 — Review before release

Every payout passes a review before release. If required information is missing or unclear, payout stays on hold until the file is resolved.

Screen 3 — Recipient type

Before payout can be released, your payout profile must be reviewed under the correct recipient type.

Screen 4 — Why payouts may be delayed

POOOL may place payouts on hold where required information is incomplete or still under review.

Screen 5 — Additional review

If your payout file contains unclear or conflicting information, POOOL may request more information and keep the payout on hold until review is complete.

Screen 6 — Final payout notice

Your commission may appear in your dashboard, but it will not be released until your payout and tax information is complete and approved.

D. Final legal-review flags only

1. Final public wording for recipient classification and whether the three launch classes should appear in all affiliate-facing surfaces or only in onboarding/support.
2. Final public wording for the review/withholding step and how much of that process should be visible publicly.
3. Final public wording for “no personal tax advice.”
4. Final public wording for payout holds, exceptions, and any escalation language.

E. Readiness note for website, onboarding, and product implementation

This is ready for website, onboarding, dashboard, and support implementation review. The underlying logic is already strong. The main improvement was cleaning it into a tighter public/product layer by removing internal-pack behavior, simplifying internal finance language, and preserving the key operational message: payout requires a complete file, review, and final approval before release.
